

It is vital that ISPs have access to phone lines to provide DSL service. I require DSL to run a server from my home as the only cable company in my area will not provide one, nor would they allow me to run a server anyway. If the phone company gains a monopoly on DSL they can dictate the price I would have to pay. My ISP also provides better service than the phone company.